The Journal of a Slave-Trader

By JOHN NEWTON

Edited by BERNARD MARTIN and MARK SPURRELL

With illustrations and maps

From 1750 to 1754 John Newton was Master of slave ships, and the journal which he then kept has ever since been locked away, unseen by any historian and only quoted briefly by one of his biographers. This first-hand record is more than a source book for historians and those concerned with the study of race problems; it is fascinating reading for anyone who likes travel books and voyages.

Three Centuries of English Nonconformity

By JOHN T. WILKINSON

The Fernley-Hartley Lecture, 1962.

The Act of Uniformity of 1662 precipitated a major crisis in the social and religious life of England. A large number of ministers of the Church of England were deprived of their livings because, in obedience to conscience, they could no longer conform. This book traces the growth of English Nonconformity in its varied fortunes through three succeeding centuries, and delineates within the historical process the basic reasons for the dissent.
